

Today is street day

Today was the first time I performed on two different instruments in one day.

Piano is the one I play most often, but that's because I have more piano experience, and because I don't have many saxophone songs and haven't memorized the full melodies yet, so I've performed piano more often.

November 2, 2025

Morning... I played the saxophone while sitting on a bench in my usual nearby park.

Afternoon... I played the piano at LaSola Sapporo for the second time.

Thank you to everyone who stopped nearby to listen to me play the saxophone.

Thank you to everyone who stopped nearby to listen and applaud during my piano performance.

Thank you to everyone who stopped nearby to listen and applaud during my piano performance.

By the way, my violin skills are currently limited to about three bars of "Canon," so I'm looking forward to practicing every day until I can play the familiar bars in the chorus of this song.

By the way, I'm not rich...

All items are second-hand (purchased on Mercari or Rakuma).

1.Digital piano (I think it was around ¥20,000)

2.Saxophone (I think it was around ¥15,000)

(I had it inspected at Shimamura Music Store and they confirmed it was broken.)

3.Soprano saxophone (I think it was new for about ¥15,000 at Temu)

(Fukusuke, a nearby used sax dealer I used to frequent, has closed down, but I received their approval that it was a broken saxophone...meaning it was worthless.)

4.Violin (I think it was around ¥15,000)

As you all know, I bought two junk small multifunction printers.

The total cost for both was just under 7,000 yen (because they are essential business tools for legal matters).

I managed to fix both myself and they're both working fine now.

(You can select the printer by selecting it.)

The truth is that I've been cutting back on my food budget to make money for the above five items.

And to sum up,

I will continue to practice every day, and practice with the mindset that tomorrow will be better than today, and the day after tomorrow than tomorrow...

and then I will go out on the streets again.

That's all.

See previous work

Premonition of a solo orchestra