

I'm starting to want to try out for music college

Current

- ① Piano
- ② Saxophone
- ③ Violin
- ④ Composing

①, ③, and ④ are all subjects covered by the entrance exam, while ② is not.

The most important things are "reading notation" and "music theory."

Even if I take the piano performance exam, I can't choose the pieces I'm good at, so

*Playing the piano while looking at sheet music

*And another "instrumental" or "vocal"

While you can take the exam with the above two qualifications, the first exam is incredibly difficult, consisting of a "desktop test" and "performance from sheet music."

It seems that not all professional pianists, violinists, and cellists graduate from music colleges.

For example, pianist Hayato Kadono, who appears in my YouTube videos, graduated from the University of Tokyo's Faculty of Engineering and then the University of Tokyo's Graduate School of Information Processing Engineering, not from a music college.

Each person is different, and I've heard that more piano teachers at school are likely to be music college graduates.

If I were to take the music college entrance exam, I would:

- ① Graduate from Kinki University, Faculty of Law, Department of Law
- ② Graduate from Sompo University (a private university with qualifications) (Total + Planner)
- ③ Currently studying at Seisa University, Faculty of Coexistence, Department of Coexistence Science, High School/Junior High School English Teacher Training Course

Since I graduated from ① above, I am currently a fourth-year student transferring in the third year.

* Dropped out of Shiseido Gakuen Cosmetology School

* Summer online course experience at the State University of New York at Albany Law School

Although she has no experience in ballet school or theater, she has attended classes in the city a few times and is now participating in high-level courses on her own.

Including music college, this is my fourth university, and I'm still a university student. Naturally, I'm completely outside the scope of new graduate job hunting, and I've become known as "the most troublesome person in the universe" in various cases,

- ① Highly likely to result in legal issues.
- ② Highly likely to leave no one behind.
- ③ ③ There is a very high possibility that the company has been effectively taken over (making suggestions on management methods, etc.)
- ④ Giving too much advice and suggestions.
- ⑤ Standing out too much on first impressions.

I'm probably the root cause of the word "troublesome," so while there seem to be many freelance career options, surprisingly, there aren't. My economic situation is such that I can barely make a living, and I don't even have the money to register a company, so I can't start a business...

Hi, Thanks!
