

I might be an island all to myself

The result is always implicit

I haven't had any calls lately, and there's usually at least one in my mailbox at any given time. I haven't even received any demand letters or notices of legal action. The most recent call in my call history is from the day before yesterday, to check if the call was connected to "177." I accidentally dialed "117" the first time, and that call history is still there.

It may be that we're no longer on a deserted island, but rather on an island where we're all alone.

As of today's information, 3,000 yen has been provided to each person (mostly in the form of electronic gifts).

This is a very welcome development...

② There's a possibility that this is a case in forbidden territory.

②It may also be because they've already had experience with Supreme Court cases.

Either way, it's already been submitted, so there's nothing they can do...

I'm a bit confused about the fact that it's 3,000 yen and not 20,000 yen, but I may be mistaken, so please forgive me.
